PROJECT: Epiais-Rhus is a French village situated in the department of Val-d'Oise, in the heart of the natural reserve of French Vexin, and composed by the villages of Épiáis and Rhus. Peopled with more than 600 inhabitants, the village extends over more than 10 km². The territory of the village is populated since the prehistory as gives evidence of it the discovery of cut flints. A few considerable historic sites are remarkable (church Saint Didier, two washhouses, the station of Rhus and an big archeological site of 50 ha). French Vexin shelters a heritage outstandingly well preserved which survived for its major part the destructions of the Revolution and which justified the classification of the plateau in conformance with the classified sites. French Vexin indeed counts not less than 120 churches and 80 castles, partially or totally classified historic monuments.
